

AVAIL DIVORCE – WHO WE ARE

Nate Zorich, Avail Divorce Founder and Chief Executive Officer

After experiencing the frustration of the divorce process himself, Nate Zorich founded Avail Divorce in 2017 to offer tools, provide resources and build a community for the more than 1.5 million Americans who go through divorce every year.

Nate graduated from Indiana University of Pennsylvania where he played Division 1 hockey. Nate went on to achieve the classic “American dream” – secured a great job, got married, completed his MBA, had two beautiful children, and bought a house in Fort Collins, Colo. The marriage deteriorated, and Nate found himself at a crossroads with no resources BY divorced people FOR divorced people. Every online resource he was able to find within the multi-billion dollar divorce industry led to a sales pitch or was difficult to understand.

Leveraging his business background, Nate began developing a resource that made it easier to navigate the challenges of divorce. He wanted to provide people with the information they needed to make the right decisions, offer tools to make the process less stressful and create a community of support to make divorce less lonely. Through Avail Divorce, Nate has created practical, tangible resources that work to break the stigma of divorce, save people time and money, and help people come out on the other side of divorce happy and healthy. Nate is set to launch Avail Divorce in Spring 2021.

When he's not leading and inspiring Avail Divorce's vibrant community, Nate can be found strumming his guitar, playing ice hockey, co-parenting his children and playing with his rescue dog.

Jenn Ciplet, Avail Divorce Founder and Chief Creative Officer

Avail Divorce Founder and Chief Creative Officer Jenn Ciplet is a lifelong public educator with real-world experience bridging social justice issues with personal transformation.

Jenn has worked in domestic violence legal clinics for immigrant women in Washington D.C., organized alongside coffee farmers and clothing factory union workers in Central America, partnered with indigenous and forest communities in the Amazon Basin to protect territories from oil and gas extraction and fought to improve racial and LGBTQ+ equity in schools.

Like Nate, she followed the rules in her mid-twenties that she had been taught her whole life about how to achieve lasting happiness in America – she completed her M.A. degree, fell in love, got married, and had three beautiful kids. Like many women of her generation, Jenn struggled with how “small” her life suddenly felt as a new mom and wife. With three young children, she couldn’t earn enough to afford childcare and made the decision to stay home or work part-time for her kids’ earliest years. She found herself facing the nagging questions: “Is this all there is? Where did I go?” In 2015 Jenn and her family moved from Providence, R.I. to Colorado where she became the director of communications for the University of Colorado Boulder’s community-based learning center. After 14 years of marriage, Jenn and her then-husband divorced.

Jenn joined Avail Divorce in 2018 as Chief Creative Officer, committed to tearing down the cultural shame and stigma around divorce, and celebrating change and new beginnings in the chapters after divorce. Jenn brings her inspirational vision, articulate communication skills and passion to Avail.

In her free time, Jenn enjoys photography, yoga, travel, craft beer and keeping a sense of humor while co-parenting her three children.

For media inquiries, please contact:

Emily Tracy, ROOT Marketing & PR

919-449-4803

emily@rootmarketingpr.com